He asserted it would be unwise for this country to permit "our activities in seeking for peace in the old world to blind us to the essentials of peace at home," and added that "if America can be made to forget the attempted batter of nationality, well and good.' but that "when nationality is surrendered to internationality is surrendered to internationality. little else matters, and all appeal is vain." The address was delivered to a delegation of Wayne county, Ohio, Republicans. Taking up the league of nations, Senator Harding declared it to be the other extreme to a referendum on a proposed declaration of war. "I emphatically agree," he said. "that no authority other than congress may call our boys to battle. Accepting this truth, why make a covenant which violates the good faith of nations?"

"Suppose," he continued, "that under Article X a program of armed force is agreed upon, and the congress of the United States declines to respond. The executive would be called upon to carry on a war without constitutional authority or we should prove our compact no more than a scrap of paper. We are on the side of both safety and honor to hold for ourselves the decision of our obligations to the world."

Senator Harding's address, in part, follows:

"There have come to me, not at all unbecomingly, the expressed anxieties of Americans foreign born, who are asking our country's future attitude on territorial awards in the adjustment of peace. They are Americans all, but they have a proper and natural interest in the fortunes of kinsfolk and native lands. One can not biame them. If our land is to settle the envies, rivalries, jealousies and hatreds of all civilization, these adopted sons of the republic want the settlement favorable to the land from which they came.
